AS PROMISED, LEVIT & JAMES REDUCES PRICING FOR AWARD-WINNING CROSSEYES

Washington, D.C. (January 6, 2004) - Levit & James, a leading provider of software utilities and conversion programs, has instituted significant price reductions on its award-winning CrossEyes product, for both commercial and government customers. Single licenses have been reduced by one-third and large site-licenses by 80%. The price reductions went into effect January 1, 2004.

CrossEyes is the first product that "Reveals the Codes" in Microsoft Word. CrossEyes brings up a window at the bottom of a Word document, which shows all formatting details as coding, in-line with the text, and allows users to edit their documents by double-clicking on the code tags in the CrossEyes window. Microsoft Word has no similar capability. The features provided by CrossEyes are the most customer-requested enhancements for Microsoft Word.

"As we promised when CrossEyes was first released, if the product proved to be successful, we would lower pricing to make it more cost-effective for all customers," said Ian Levit, vice-president of marketing and sales for Levit & James. "We are confident that the substantial reductions in the cost of a site-license will help make CrossEyes the natural choice for all sites that use Microsoft Word."

"We've learned in the last few years that CrossEyes is most effective for an organization when it is available to all users of Word," continued Mr. Levit. The formatting and related problems that users of average skills encounter with Word, can waste a significant amount of time. Since CrossEyes quickly shows users all the formatting detail in their documents, they can easily solve most problems quickly, and on their own, which means fewer calls to the help desk."
